Always respect the hiking and mountaineering rules

- Check your physical condition before you start a hike and choose an appropriate tour according to your experience and the shape of your hiking companions.
- It's absolutely necessary to accurately plan a hiking tour in Alpine terrain. Not only the length and the distance but also the difference in altitude is important.
- Appropriate hiking and mountaineering equipment is a must. Hiking clothes, non-slip hiking boots, raingear and protection against cold are absolutely required as the weather can change quickly.
- You should always be informed about the weather conditions and check the latest weather report.
- Choose the mountain tour according to the season and the length of the day. Inform someone about the tour, the exact route and when you plan to be back.
- Start your hike as early as possible so that you return early and don't be caught by darkness.
- Never hike alone. Always check the fitness of your hiking companions first, then choose a mountain tour according to the physical shape of the weakest hiker.
- The right walking speed is of utmost importance for all hikers, depending on your own stamina and the physical fitness of your companions. A walking pace which is too fast causes overexertion.
- Never leave the signposted hiking trails. Especially in snow-covered glacier areas and on via ferratas a chest and sit harness, secured by a rope, are absolutely required.
- Don't leave garbage in the mountains. Help us to keep the mountains tidy!
- Dogs must be kept on a leash.
